seen that the political status of each individual is given only with reference to the old party lines, without regard to the political views entertained on the slavery question. A list specifying the abolitionists and free-soilers would be desirable; but as it is manifestly impossible for us to prepare such a list at the present time, and as any attempt to do so, would necessarily end in injustice to some, we have simply given the party complexion of the members thus far chosen, without attempting to say who were abolition or freesoil democrats, or abolition or free-soil whigs. Some of those whom we have classed among the democrats entertain anti-slavery sentiments which override their democracy, and very many whom we have classed among the whigs are in a similar category.
